GMUNC XIII

AD HOC

THE FATE OF THE CONTINENT

Foreword

Welcome to the Gunn Model United Nations Conference(GMUNC) XIII and the Ad Hoc Committee! Having previously attended GMUNC, I am honored to be a part of this conference again and excited for another memorable year.

This committee explores the tense political situation and growing turmoil within Panem following the collapse of the Capitol's regime and the end of the Second Rebellion. Your goal as delegates will be to make critical decisions about the nation's future and determine how Panem can transition from decades of authoritarian rule to a new political order. You must consider the demands of the Districts, the consequences of the rebellion, the need for justice and accountability, and the economic, political, and social challenges that will shape Panem's future.

Since this is an ad hoc committee, a position paper will not be necessary, and no research awards will be awarded. Crisis updates will occur, and all writing will be done in the form of crisis notes and directives. Please send any committee-specific inquiries to the committee email address: adhoc.gmuncxiiii@gmail.com. Additionally, all delegates are required to complete contact and medical forms to participate in the conference. Please confirm with your delegation that the required documents have been submitted. I wish you the best with your preparation for this conference and look forward to seeing everyone on October 24, 2026, for GMUNC XIII.

Rania Bhalla

Head Chair

Chair Bios

Head Chair: Rania Bhalla

Hi everyone!

My name is Rania Bhalla, and I am so excited to serve as your head chair for GMUNC XIII! Currently, I'm a senior here at Gunn High School and also serve as the USG of Gunn's MUN team. Now entering my third year in MUN, I've come to love and enjoy it so much, and I am truly honored to be able to share that with all of you. Ad Hoc committees are my favorite, with collaboration, quick decision-making, and outside-the-box thinking highlighted. This will be GMUNC XIII's only Ad Hoc, and we are so excited for you all to learn our topic! Outside of MUN, I enjoy politics, human rights advocacy, and on a less formal note, running, skiing, and swimming. I look forward to meeting all of you in October, and good luck!

email: bhallarania@icloud.com

alternate email: rb36867@pausd.us

Co-Chair/Crisis Director: Tai Ford

Hi everyone!!

My name is Tai Ford, and I can't wait to be your co-chair for GMUNC XIII. I'm a junior here at Gunn and starting my second year of Model UN! Fun fact: my first-ever committee was a crisis (chaired by none other than Rania) last year at GMUNC XII, so this conference means a lot to me. Since last October, my passion for debate, collaboration, and the fast-paced, ever-changing nature of crisis committees has only grown. We are going to have so much fun. MUN aside, I co-lead my school's Women in Politics club, play volleyball, and recently started rowing—I also spend a lot of time learning languages and cooking and/or baking. Good luck, and we can't wait to meet you in the fall!

Email: taililiford@gmail.com

alternate email: tf39132@pausd.us

About Committee

The ruins of the Capitol, the capital city of Panem, which lies in former North America.

The provisional government of Panem is a collection of powerful leaders—whether it be in resources, numbers, or influence—tasked with completely rebuilding what was once Panem. The nation had been divided into 13 districts for well over a century, each responsible for its own particular trade—for example, District 4 was responsible for fishing, and District 12 for coal. These goods were then transported to and used to support the wealthy nobility living in the Capitol, in exchange for the districts' protection by Peacekeepers. After the fall of two major leaders, a former dictator(President Coriolanus Snow) and interim President(President Alma Coin), however, Panem's economic, political, and legislative slate is wiped clean.

In this committee, delegates will take the roles of District Leaders, Hunger Games victors, Generals, and more, to forge Panem's new system of government. You will begin promptly after the death of Coriolanus Snow, Panem's old totalitarian dictator, and Interim President Alma Coin. The ultimate goal of the committee is to draft and pass new legislation to replace the Treaty of Treason that once defined Panem. Delegates, you will navigate nothing short of unrest and chaos throughout the day, so we hope you're ready!

Introduction

Welcome to the Ad Hoc Committee (AdHoc)! In this committee, we will be focusing on the Hunger Games, particularly the rebirth of Panem following the collapse of both the Capitol's regime and the Second Rebellion.

The year is 75 years after the First Rebellion. For decades, Panem has existed under the strict control of the Capitol, with the Districts forced to provide resources to the Capitol in exchange for protection by Peacekeepers. The Treaty of Treason established this system following the First Rebellion, creating the political, economic, and social structure that would govern Panem for generations.

Now, that system has collapsed.

The Second Rebellion has brought an end to President Snow's regime, but victory has come at an enormous cost. The Capitol has been devastated, Districts have suffered widespread destruction, and the political institutions that once governed Panem have been left fractured or completely dismantled. The economy has also been severely disrupted, with transportation networks, resource distribution, and entire communities damaged by years of conflict. After 74 years of centralized rule, Panem is suddenly without a stable government or clear system for determining how the nation should move forward.

At the same time, the new provisional government must decide how to address the legacy of the old regime. Millions have experienced oppression, violence, and loss under the Capitol, creating demands for justice and accountability. However, excessive retaliation could create further instability in a nation already recovering from civil war. The delegates must therefore determine how Panem can hold those responsible accountable while preventing another cycle of violence.

The Districts themselves must also determine their future. For generations, they have been governed by the Capitol and restricted to specialized industries, but the rebellion has given them newfound political power and independence. Some may want to preserve Panem as a unified nation, while others may demand greater autonomy or even independence. The provisional government must determine how much authority should remain with a central government and how much should be given to the individual Districts.

Delegates, you must decide what path Panem will take. Your decisions will determine not only how the nation recovers from the Second Rebellion, but what kind of government, economy, and society will emerge from its aftermath.

Will you preserve Panem as one nation? Will you give the Districts greater sovereignty? Will you prioritize justice or reconciliation? How will you rebuild an economy and infrastructure devastated by war?

Panem's future lies in your hands.

Historical Context

Katniss's mockingjay pin, a symbol of the revolution

Key Terms

Panem:

Post-nuclear/apocalyptic nation built upon the ruins of a climate-ravaged North America. Historically centralized in the Capitol, and other territories divided into the Districts described below.

Districts (1-12)

Essentially segregated colonies all restricted to a specialized industry by the Treaty of Treason, ensuring that they are dependent on the Capitol for survival. A quick summary of the trade of each district and their sub-groups, excluding one, two, and four, which are explained later. Districts 3, 5, and 6: The Industrial/Energy Districts. Responsible for technology, power and energy, and transportation, respectively.

Districts 7-12, the agricultural and resource districts. 7—lumber, 8—textiles, 9—grain, 10—livestock, 11—agriculture, 12—coal.

District 13

It was the only District with an independent nuclear arsenal and headed the First Rebellion, but after being brutally defeated by the Capitol's army, they were forced underground and wiped off all national maps by the Capitol. They later resurfaced during the Second Rebellion.

Career Districts (1, 2, 4)

The wealthiest and most subservient districts who view the Hunger Games as an immense honor and privilege. Their cooperativeness maintained a closer relationship to the Capitol, which granted them unique advantages. They are mostly responsible for luxury goods, 1 being masonry, 2 for weaponry and Panem's military backbone (a fortress), and 4 for fishing. Tributes from these districts were trained for the Games and often are eager to volunteer in place of the randomly selected individuals.

The Capitol:

The central city of wealthy elites that benefit from the toil of the districts and run the annual Hunger Games. This is where former President Snow resided and now where the committee is taking place.

The Dark Days:

The period encompassing the First Rebellion, but overall a bloody and chaotic time filled with starvation, cannibalism, violence, and destruction. During this period, the original 12 districts allied with District 13 to attempt to overthrow the Capitol, but ultimately failed and resulted in the implementation of the Treaty of Treason. District 13 was destroyed.

The First Rebellion

The allied uprising of all 13 districts against the Capitol.

Treaty of Treason:

Instituted by the Capitol after The First Rebellion, mandated the annual Hunger Games as punishment, abolished inter-district travel, established a resource quota for each district, and instated absolute martial law by Peacekeepers.

Peacekeepers:

Enforced aforementioned martial law in the districts; public executions, execution without trial, floggings, torture, etc. to suppress dissent and freedom of speech.

The Hunger Games:

Imposed by the Treaty of Treason, the games serve to divide the colonies by pitting them against one another and making them rivals in a fight to the death. This ensures that there is no unified uprising against the Capitol.

Each Hunger Games is held in a special, unique arena designed by Gamemakers. This is often to the benefit of some tributes, who have specific strengths based on the district they come from. For example, Annie Cresta is a tribute from District 4 (and consequently a strong swimmer) who won the 70th Games by outlasting other tributes after their arena flooded.

The Games are broadcast in the Capitol and function similarly to reality TV as we know it.

The Second Rebellion:

The nationwide civil war that occurred in the year leading up to the committee ultimately overthrew totalitarian dictator Coriolanus Snow and liberated the Districts.

Unlike the First Rebellion, which ended with the Capitol decisively reasserting its control over Panem, the Second Rebellion fundamentally dismantled the political and economic institutions that had governed Panem for 74 years. What began as growing resistance to the Capitol developed into a coordinated rebellion involving District populations, former victors, District 13, rebel military forces, and individuals within the Capitol itself. The rebellion eventually reached the Capitol, resulting in widespread destruction and the collapse of Snow's government.

Tributes:

Individuals reaped (selected) to compete in the Hunger Games.

The Reaping:

The annual random selection of two tributes, one boy, one girl, ages 12-18, from each of the 12 districts to compete in the Hunger Games.

Victors:

The singular surviving tribute of a respective Hunger Games. Previous victors have won their games in a multitude of ways, often outlasting other tributes or eliminating them by violent means.

The Mockingjay:

A symbol of the rebellion, initially a pin worn by Katniss Everdeen and later a title she is given as resistance takes hold.

Background

Two rebel commanders, President Alma Coin and Former Head Gamemaker Plutarch Havensbee, plan an attack on the Capitol.

The provisional government of Panem is a collection of powerful leaders—whether it be in resources, numbers, or influence—tasked with completely rebuilding what was once Panem. The nation had been divided into 13 districts for well over a century, each responsible for its own particular trade—for example, District 4 was responsible for fishing, and District 12 for coal. These goods were then transported to and used to support the wealthy nobility living in the Capitol, in exchange for the districts' protection by Peacekeepers. After the fall of two major leaders, a former dictator and interim President, however, Panem's economic, political, and legislative slate is wiped clean.

The collapse of Snow's government means that the provisional government is inheriting a country with almost no established political framework. For 74 years, the Capitol determined how the Districts were governed, how resources were allocated, how dissent was punished, and how political authority was exercised. Although the rebellion has removed the leadership responsible for this system, it has not automatically created a replacement. The delegates therefore have to determine not only what policies Panem should adopt, but what institutions should have the authority to create and enforce those policies.

The same problem exists economically. Panem's economy was never designed as a collection of independent regions. The Districts were deliberately specialized and dependent upon one another, with the Capitol acting as the central point through which resources flowed. This arrangement allowed the Capitol to maintain control over the Districts, but it also meant that the sudden collapse of the Capitol threatened the functioning of the entire national economy.

A District that produces food, for example, may not have functioning railways through which that food can reach another District. A District responsible for energy production may not have access to the workers, equipment, or transportation necessary to maintain its facilities. Communities destroyed during the rebellion may require immediate reconstruction before they can resume their previous economic roles.

This means that economic reconstruction is inseparable from political reconstruction. The provisional government cannot simply declare that the old Capitol-controlled economy is over without determining what will replace it. Delegates must consider who controls resources, how goods are distributed, how damaged infrastructure is rebuilt, and whether Districts should continue their previous specialized industries at all.

The government must also determine how Panem should respond to the legacy of the old regime. The rebellion was fought against a government responsible for decades of violence, but not every person living in the Capitol necessarily participated in that system in the same way. Similarly, members of the Peacekeepers, military, government, and Hunger Games system may have varying levels of responsibility. The provisional government therefore faces a difficult distinction between justice and collective punishment.

The destruction of the previous government also raises the question of sovereignty. Under Snow, the Districts had almost no meaningful political independence. Under a new government, however, simply restoring the same centralized structure would risk recreating many of the conditions that caused the rebellion in the first place. At the same time, giving every District complete independence could make it difficult to coordinate national defense, infrastructure, economic recovery, and resource distribution.

The consequences of the rebellion extend far beyond the removal of President Snow. For decades, Panem's government had relied upon the Capitol as the center of political authority, economic distribution, military command, and communication. The destruction of the Capitol therefore left a massive power vacuum. The government that had controlled the Districts no longer exists in its previous form, but there is also no established replacement capable of immediately assuming all of its responsibilities.

The rebellion also severely disrupted the economic system created after the First Rebellion. Each District had been assigned a specialized industry and was expected to produce specific resources for Panem. These resources were transported throughout the country through systems ultimately controlled by the Capitol. Because the rebellion damaged transportation networks, destroyed communities, displaced workers, and disrupted the authority responsible for coordinating production and distribution, Panem can no longer rely upon the economic system that existed under Snow.

This creates an immediate humanitarian problem for the provisional government. The end of the Capitol's rule does not automatically restore food, electricity, transportation, housing, or other necessities. Some Districts may possess important resources while lacking the infrastructure to distribute them, while other Districts may be dependent upon supplies that are no longer reaching them. If these problems remain unresolved, the political victory of the rebellion could quickly be followed by famine, shortages, unrest, or conflict between Districts.

The Second Rebellion has also created a complicated question of justice. For generations, the Capitol used Peacekeepers, executions, torture, the Hunger Games, and other forms of political repression to maintain control. Many individuals who participated in the former government remain alive, while many rebels and civilians have suffered or committed violence during the war. The provisional government must therefore determine how Panem should respond to decades of abuses without creating another cycle of retaliation.

Finally, the rebellion has fundamentally changed the relationship between the Districts and the Capitol. The Districts are no longer simply territories operating under unquestioned Capitol authority. Many now possess their own political and military leaders, while their populations have experienced years of rebellion and resistance. The provisional government must decide whether these Districts should once again operate under a centralized national government or whether they should receive significantly greater political autonomy.

Current Situation

Katniss Everdeen, the 'Mockingjay', filming a propaganda video in the ruins of a bombed hospital.

Katniss Everdeen, a symbol of the resistance and victor of the 74th Hunger Games, has just fatally shot Interim President Alma Coin. In a sudden twist of events, Katniss shifted the angle of her bow up from President Snow, who stood tied to a wooden post, awaiting execution, to Coin, who stood above him. Snow is killed in the ensuing chaos.

Delegates of Panem's provisional government, the fate of the nation is in your hands. However, before any true progress can be made, an important decision lies before you: the fate of Katniss Everdeen.

Execution, or immunity? High-ranking officials in District 13 and military loyalists were led by Coin for years, who was widely known as the leader of the victorious Rebel group in control of Panem. Those individuals viewed this act as high treason and an illegal military coup. Delegates of the outer districts and victors see Katniss as a hero who has saved Panem from a second brutal dictator. This insight comes from a previous gathering called the Council of Victors, where Coin proposed one final, symbolic Hunger Games with Capitol children. Katniss recognized that Coin would rule with the same iron fist that Snow did, and her desensitization to any kind of Hunger Games proved that.

As The Mockingjay, Katniss is a powerful symbol to people all over Panem. She therefore has an explosive impact on the committee. Delegates, you cannot table this issue. The fate of Katniss Everdeen will ultimately set the foundation for the new governance of Panem, whichever way you might take that. It is in your best interest to draft and pass a directive on the provisional status of Katniss Everdeen, and once her fate is legally determined, you may then move forward.

Once the immediate question of Katniss Everdeen's fate is addressed, the provisional government will face a country fundamentally different from the one that existed before the Second Rebellion.

The Capitol's government has collapsed, but the needs of Panem's population have not. Citizens still require food, shelter, transportation, energy, security, and functioning political institutions. The rebellion has left significant physical destruction across the nation, while the centralized systems that once coordinated the Districts have been severely weakened or eliminated.

This means that the delegates cannot treat each issue facing Panem as an isolated problem. The decisions made on one issue will directly affect every other issue before the committee.

For example, a decision to give the Districts greater sovereignty could make them more politically independent but could also complicate the national distribution of resources. A decision to prosecute large numbers of Capitol officials could satisfy demands for justice but could remove individuals with technical expertise necessary to rebuild infrastructure. Similarly, rebuilding the centralized economy could restore stability but could also reproduce economic relationships that historically benefited the Capitol at the expense of the Districts.

The provisional government therefore has to balance competing priorities while operating under extraordinary circumstances. Delegates must consider not only what they believe is morally or politically ideal, but what is immediately possible in a nation emerging from civil war.

The fate of Katniss may determine the first precedent of the new government, but the decisions that follow will determine whether that government can actually survive.

Goals for Committee

1. Finalize the fate of The Mockingjay, Katniss Everdeen

   Rule whether this symbol will live, die, or endure a third fate. You immediately set the flow of the committee and demonstrate where loyalties and intentions lie. This is the very first step in establishing new leadership.

2. Formulate a legal framework for national justice

   Design a comprehensive legal framework to address human rights abuses, war crimes, and trauma over the past 74 years. Will you carry out mass executions of Capitol elites, Gamemakers, and Peacekeepers? Or will you try to heal the fragmented population through less violent means?

3. Stabilize the national economy and infrastructure

   Re-establish the largely collapsed supply chain that once fed the Capitol. Millions are on the brink of starvation—make all necessary preparations to secure train grids, distribute rations, and begin the physical reconstruction of devastated areas like District 12. Depending on your response to this logistical emergency, you may face localized worker strikes, resource hoarding, or deadly famines.

4. Construct a new structure of sovereignty and government

   Implement a binding constitutional framework that outlines how Panem will be governed moving forward. This must take a definitive stance on regional sovereignty, addressing whether or not the nation will remain a centralized republic or dissolve into independent city-states. Be sure to take into account the multifaceted economic and political difficulties you may face in instating a new system.

Committee Members

Reading the books or watching the movies are NOT required; rather, you are welcome to use the Hunger Games Fandom wiki(found in Works Cited) for your character's research – only for the first 3 books; books 4 and 5 are irrelevant. You may also use other 'recap' methods, but we will only be referencing what is explicitly stated in the books(any discrepancies or changes within the movies will be disregarded for this committee).

Name	Delegation
Commander Paylor	District 8 Rebel Commander
Plutarch Heavensbee	Former Head Gamemaker; Rebel Strategist and Propaganda Lead
Haymitch Abernathy	District 12 Victor
Peeta Mellark	District 12 Victor
Katniss Everdeen	District 12 Victor
Cressida	Rebel Media
Annie Cresta	District 4 Victor
Johanna Mason	District 7 Victor
Commander Lyme	District 2 Rebel Commander

Gale Hawthorne	District 12 Rebel Captain
Chaff	District 11 Victor
Commander Thom	District 7 Rebel Commander
Seeder	District 11 Victor
Boggs	District 13 Commander
Beetee Latier	District 3 Victor/District 13 Weaponry
Jackson	District 13 Special Forces
Leeg	District 13 Quartermaster
Volumnia	District 13 Nuclear Division
Dr. Aurelius	Capitol Chief of Medicine
Caesar Flickerman	Capitol Broadcasting/Media
Tigris	Capitol Underground Network
Hilarius	Capitol Rail Grid System
Romulus Thread	Peacekeeper Commander
Enobaria	District 2 Victor
Gloss	District 1 Victor

Cashmere	District 1 Victor
Brutus	District 2 Victor
Mags	District 4 Victor

Works Cited

Collins, Suzanne. The Hunger Games. Scholastic Press, 2008.

Collins, Suzanne. Catching Fire. Scholastic Press, 2009.

Collins, Suzanne. Mockingjay. Scholastic Press, 2010.

The Hunger Games. Directed by Gary Ross, Lionsgate, 2012.

The Hunger Games: Catching Fire. Directed by Francis Lawrence, Lionsgate, 2013.

The Hunger Games: Mockingjay—Part 1. Directed by Francis Lawrence, Lionsgate, 2014.

The Hunger Games: Mockingjay—Part 2. Directed by Francis Lawrence, Lionsgate, 2015.

Fandom. "The Hunger Games Wiki." Fandom.Com, 2015, https://thehungergames.fandom.com/wiki/The_Hunger_Games_Wiki.